NEW Performance Areas: Adult Learning and Coaching

In general, the Performance Areas addressed in the original California Early Childhood Educator (ECE) Competencies describe the knowledge, skills, and dispositions that early childhood educators need to provide high-quality care and education to young children and their families. In contrast, the Performance Areas of Adult Learning and Coaching focus on the knowledge, skills, and dispositions needed to facilitate the professional learning and growth of early childhood educators. Because of the focus on adults, these two Performance Areas pertain to the skills and knowledge that are necessary to guide adult learners, rather than young children. As a result, they apply only to the Competency Contexts of Creating and Maintaining Program Policies and Practices and Advancing the Early Childhood Profession. The other two Competency Contexts—Supporting Early Learning and Development and Planning and Guiding Early Learning and Development—involve working directly with young children and their families. Thus, no knowledge and skills in the areas of adult learning and coaching appear under the columns labeled “Supporting Early Learning and Development” and “Planning and Guiding Early Learning and Development.” The Advancing the Early Childhood Profession context is broken into two columns to recognize the continuum of knowledge, skills, and dispositions between early childhood educators who are relatively new to working with adults in a training, supervision, or coaching context and those who have many years of experience and advanced knowledge.

The focus on adults leads to the following adaptations in defining all four competency contexts for Adult Learning and Coaching:

- Supporting Early Learning and Development: Not applicable. This context involves adults who work directly with young children and their families.
- Planning and Guiding Early Learning and Development: Not applicable. This context involves adults who work directly with young children and their families.
- Creating and Maintaining Program Policies and Practices: This context applies to early childhood educators who promote and support adults’ professional learning and growth at an organizational level and influence and create related program policies. Early childhood educators working in this context are responsible for establishing and maintaining the organizational climate and creating supportive conditions under which adult learners who work with young children and their coaches can thrive.
- Advancing the Early Childhood Profession: This context applies to early childhood educators who work directly with adults in a training, technical assistance, mentoring, coaching, or other professional development context. Early childhood educators working in this context are responsible for developing the knowledge, skills, and dispositions identified in the Adult Learning and Coaching Performance Areas in order to effectively support professional learning and growth for adults. Coaching competencies are written for coaches who are on staff within a program (internal) and for coaches who are external to the programs in which they work. Both internal and external coaches support early childhood educators within onsite coaching relationships. This context is organized into two subcontext columns to represent the continuum of skill development: from early educators just beginning to work with adults to those who have had opportunities to develop and refine their skill levels from experience in training and coaching:
  - (a) Building and Contributing to the Early Childhood Profession. This subcontext applies to early childhood educators who are relatively new to working with adults in a training, technical assistance, mentoring, coaching or other professional development context. The skills described for this subcontext are foundational for the Adult Learning and Coaching Performance Areas and outline how early childhood educators build and contribute to the early childhood profession through training and coaching.

(b) Facilitating and Leading the Early Childhood Profession.

This subcontext applies to individuals who are experienced at facilitating the professional learning and practice of early childhood educators through training, technical assistance, mentoring, coaching, or other professional development context. The subcontext also applies to early childhood educators who have an impact on policies and practices across programs. Individuals who work in this subcontext are uniquely positioned to promote research- and evidence-based practices, policies, and quality improvement initiatives both within and across programs and/or systems. The skills described for this subcontext extend those listed in the Building and Contributing subcontext to outline how early childhood educators facilitate and lead the early childhood profession through training and coaching.

Note: Coaching competencies are written for both coaches who are on staff within a program (internal) and for coaches who are external to the programs in which they work. Both internal and external coaches support early childhood educators in coaching relationships.

Because Adult Learning and Coaching are distinct from the other Performance Areas given the focus on adults as learners, additional key concepts and dispositions for them are defined.

Key Concepts for Adult Learning and Coaching

- Authentic learning environments that support adult learning are built from a foundation of trust and a culture of inquiry.
- All adult learners have strengths and areas in need of additional learning and growth. Adult learning is supported most effectively when an individual's strengths are a starting point for addressing areas in need of growth and improvement.

- Many factors influence the adult learning process for early childhood education professionals, including the adult learner's work environment and workplace conditions, their relationships, personal backgrounds (e.g., race, ethnicity, primary language, and the like), and their diverse experiences. Effectively guiding adult learning requires an understanding of the factors that support the learning process of adults as well as the barriers that prevent it.
- Coaching requires authentic collaboration. To be effective it must build mutual trust and a respectful relationship and establish and maintain a reciprocal coach-coachee partnership.
- Coaching is a dynamic and parallel process that is grounded in a learning relationship for both coach and coachee. The coach models behaviors, practices, and dispositions that support the coachee's learning, including the development of self-awareness, self-reflection, and self-directed action to benefit the children and families whom the coachee serves.

Dispositions for Adult Learning and Coaching

- Supports the learning and development of adults with an ethic of care and respect
- Is committed to improving equity and expanding what it means personally and professionally and regarding it as integral to professional learning and growth
- Sees oneself as a learner while supporting the learning of other adults, listens, works collaboratively, and is responsive to the learning needs of others
- Is open, innovative, and creative (flexible, inventive, resourceful, resilient) when engaging with adults in collaborative learning and reflection
- Appreciates, acknowledges, and is responsive to diverse cultural and linguistic backgrounds, identities, and perspectives when supporting or facilitating the learning of other adults

- Is committed to advocating the best interests (of self, children, families, workforce) for work environments that promote professional learning, reflection, and equity
