A good first impression is important to establish a positive experience for newcomer students and families entering a new schooling environment. Below are some things to consider when interacting with Afghan newcomers. For more detailed information, reference the cultural resources listed in the table below.

Afghan versus Afghani – A person from Afghanistan is referred to as an Afghan not as an Afghani. Afghani is the currency used in Afghanistan.

Arabs and Middle Eastern – Afghanistan is geographically located in South Asia. Afghans are not considered Arab or Middle Eastern.

Greetings – Typical greeting between people of the same gender involves a handshake with the right hand. People of the opposite gender do not touch during greetings unless they are a close family member.

Eye Contacts – There may be a lack of direct eye contact between people of the opposite gender or between a younger person and an adult as a sign of respect. However, direct eye contact is common between people with the same age, gender, and status.

Name Pronunciation – A person’s name is part of their identity. It is important to learn to correctly pronounce the name of the student and their family members. Ask the students directly on how to pronounce their name instead of assuming the pronunciation.
